

One bright morning, Fox set out in search of breakfast. It wasn't long before he came upon Bear, who was eating berries he had picked from a bush that hung high over the river.

Fox wanted to eat berries too. Far too lazy to pick his own, he said, . . .

👁️ “Hello, Bear. May I have your berries?”

☹ Bear said, "No." He did not want to give Fox his berries.

So Fox pointed at the river. "Never mind, Bear. I'll just eat those delicious looking berries down there."

Of course, we know the berries were really just a reflection in the water, but Bear didn't. So Bear jumped into the river after them!

🕒 Bear did not find any berries.

☹ Cold and wet, Bear climbed back on shore to find that Fox had eaten every last one of his berries.

Fox was very clever. He had tricked Bear.

🕒 Bear was wet and Bear was mad!

☞ Fox was still hungry. So off he went in search of more food. It wasn't long before he came upon Chipmunk, who was busy collecting acorns.

Fox wanted to eat acorns too. Far too lazy to collect his own, he said, . . .

🗨️ "Hello, Chipmunk. May I have your acorns?"