Egypt!

You still can't believe you won first prize in the essay contest. Here you are with the sand under your feet and the dry desert wind in your hair. It seems like a dream to be going on a dig this huge. And with someone as famous as the brilliant archaeologist Professor Emil Snackport! You're one of only six students from around the world selected for this honor.

"Come along, right this way," the guide says. "No pushing. Single-file line."

You peek around two big kids chatting in German. There it is! Huge and dark against the starry night sky—Pyramid X! It was only recently uncovered and it's supposed to be unlike any of the other great pyramids in Egypt. It hasn't even been fully explored yet. Who knows what kinds of secrets and mysteries it might hold?

GO ON TO THE NEXT PAGE.

Professor Snackport heads for Pyramid X. You and the other kids follow him . . .

. . . and soon you see a dark, creepy doorway right at ground level.

"You're some of the luckiest children on Earth!" Professor Snackport says. "There are so many rumors about this pyramid! Some say it's the home of ruthless, evil creatures. Or that strange wizards built it with ancient magic. Some even say that the hieroglyphs inside are magical themselves!"

He looks around at the group, eager and excited. "I guess we'll find out soon, won't we, children?"

Professor Snackport ducks inside.

You and the other students have no choice but to follow the professor . . .

. . . into a long, stone hallway. Everyone else is ahead of you. But off to your left, you see a small, dark, mysterious passageway. What could be down there . . . ?
